Water is the Foundation of Life

Approximately

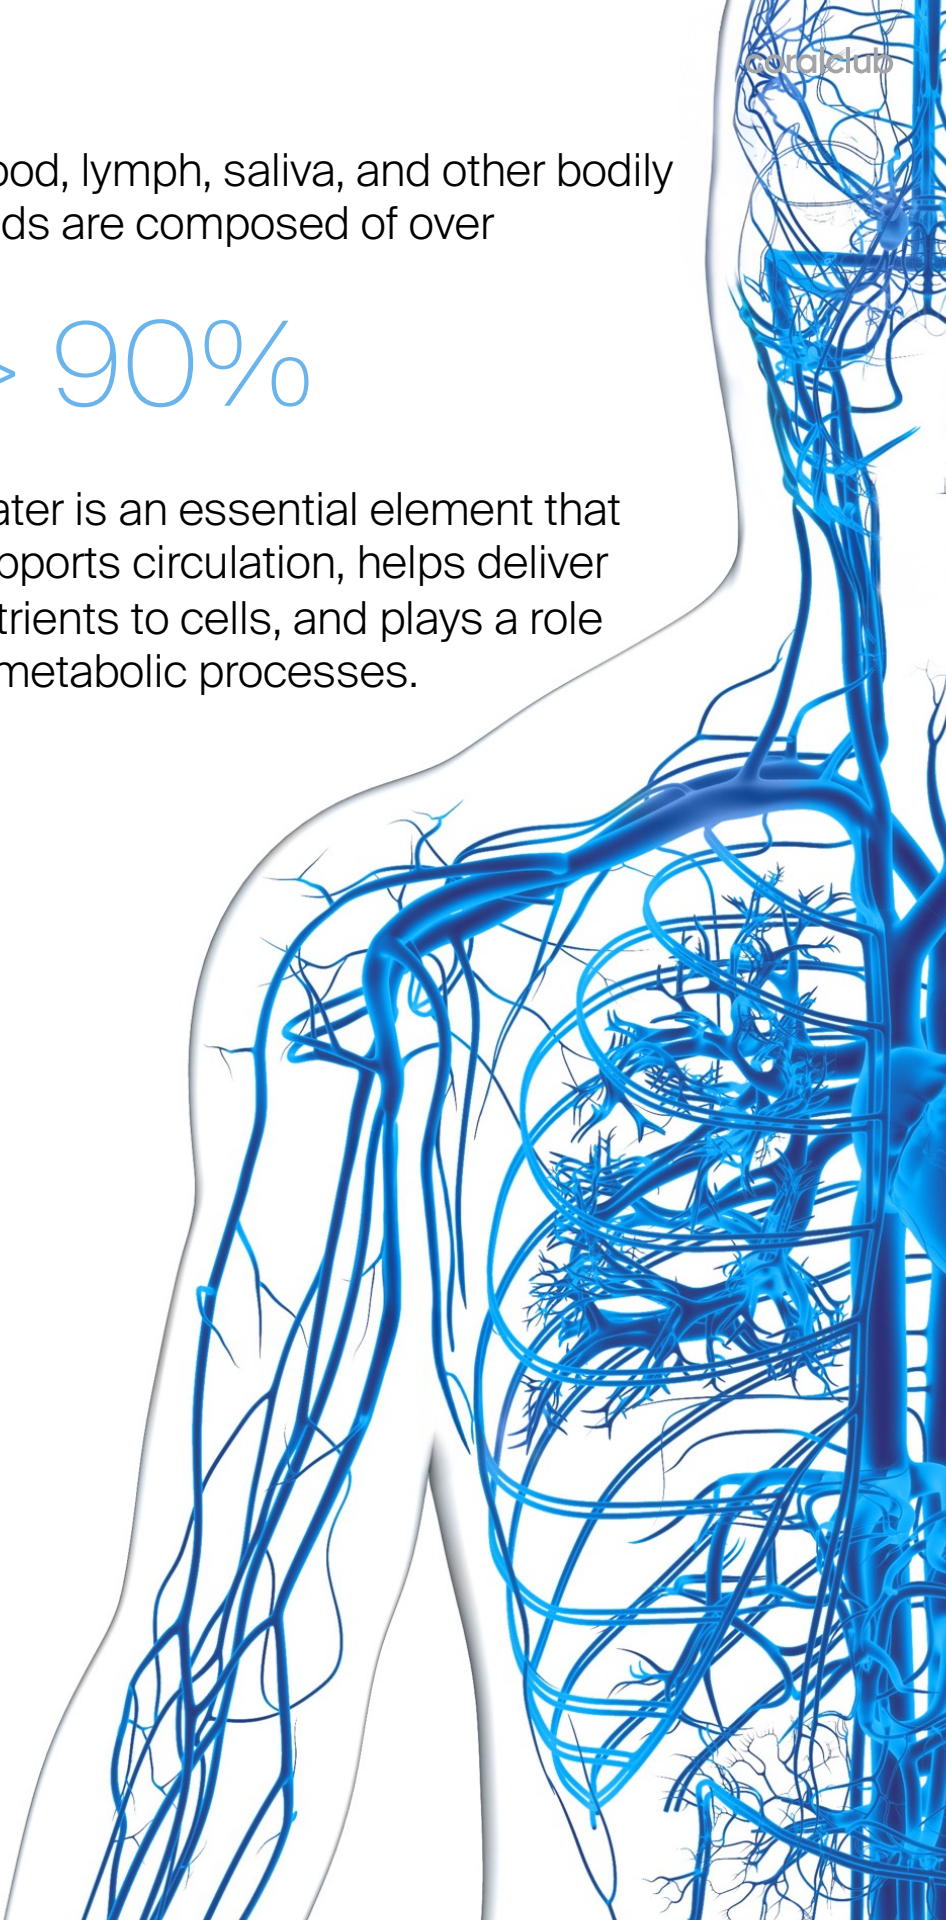

~60%

of the human body is water, making it essential for all physiological processes.

Blood, lymph, saliva, and other bodily fluids are composed of over

> 90%

Water is an essential element that supports circulation, helps deliver nutrients to cells, and plays a role in metabolic processes.

Not All Water Is Created Equal

Maintaining proper hydration isn't just about drinking plenty of water; it's also about paying attention to quality. The type of water you consume helps support hydration at the cellular level.

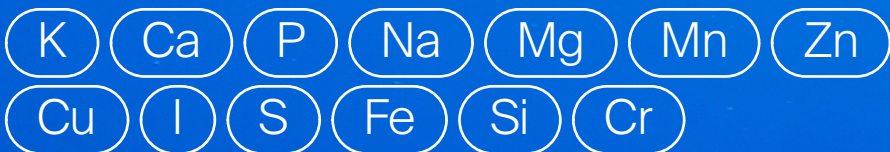

Pure Drinking Water

Beverages like tea, coffee, and alcohol can dehydrate the body.

Physiologically Complete Water

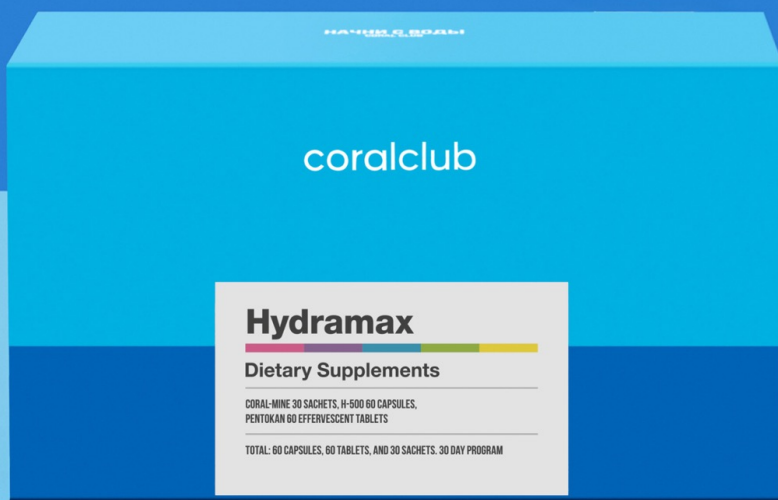

Optimal hydration comes from water that is balanced in mineral content and pH levels, supporting normal bodily functions.
